Kennedy Arranges Mondale-Hart Talk, Issues Endorsement

By Milton Coleman Washington Post Service

ST. PAUL, Minnesota - Senator Edward M. Kennedy of Massa-chusetts, a spoiler of Democratic Party unity in 1980, assumed the role of peacemaker Monday, as he endorsed Walter F. Mondale and arranged a meeting between Mr. Mondale and his rival for the nomination, Senator Gary Hart.

Mr. Mondale's aides announced that the former vice president and the Colorado senator would meet Tuesday in New York to begin what a Mondale aide termed "the beginning of reconciliation."

Later on Monday, in another sign of reconciliation, Mr. Mondale and Hart supporters in Washington announced an agreement to head off a fight over nearly 600 delegates to the Democratic National Convention that Mr. Hart has contended were elected illegal-ly. But Mr. Hart said he would continue to seek the Democratic nomination. In St. Paul, Mr. Kennedy and Mr. Mondale made a joint appearance at the Minnesota state capital, where Mr. Kennedy promised "ev-ery effort of mind and heart and irit" to help Mr. Mondale in the

"We have had our full and open debate within the Democratic Party, and now is the time for us to stop debating ourselves and to start debating Ronald Reagan," Mr.

Saying "there are no profound issues that divide us," Mr. Kennedy said Democrats had a "moral imperative . . . to heal our party, to defeat Ronald Reagan and to elect Fritz Mondale."

[In Washington, Mr. Hart said he would not challenge Mondale delegates at the convention next month in exchange for rule changes that could enhance his chances for the nomination in 1988; The Associated Press reported. That agree-ment was also mediated by Mr. Kennedy, The AP said, quoting unidentified Democratic sources.

[Mr. Hart said he had reached the decision because he did not warn to encourage "divisiveness or rancor" within the party. At one point Monday, however, Mr. Mondale rejected an implication that he would be unable to win black votes in the South without Mr. Jackson's backing

EC Ministers Discuss New Proposals on U.K. as Economic Summit Opens

FONTAINEBLEAU, France -Foreign ministers of the European Community took up new proposals Monday evening to resolve the deadlock over Britain's contribution to the EC budget as the com-munity's crucial economic summit

Several proposals, including one by the EC Commission, were made as the meeting began, but British spokesmen suggested that Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher preferred one submitted in March by President François Mitterrand of France, the current chairman of the EC Council.

Dollar Climbs Further As U.S. Prime Rate Rises

Compiled by Our Stuff From Dispatches LONDON - The dollar surged Monday, fueled by the decision Friday of U.S. congressional con-ferees to repeal the 30-percent withholding tax on interest paid to foreign investors and by a rise in the U.S. prime rate,

The likely repeal of the withholding tax on interest paid to foreign investors from U.S. securities would make purchase of the securities more attactive to foreigners, thus increasing demand for dollars.

The dollar has also been propped for some time by the continued rapid expansion of the U.S. economy, which has tended to keep interest rates high because of strong credit demand and the Federal Reserve's fight against inflation. Last week, the government reported that the U.S. economy was growing at a faster-than-expected 5.7-percent annual rate in the second quarter.

Liberation theology arose more than a decade ago in Latin America as church thinkers joined forces with social activists to create a framework of concepts promoting justice for the region's poor and

The approach is pragmatic, resting on the assumption that theology emerges from the response of the church to human needs within a particular setting. The approach has since been adapted for use in other parts of the Third World and among feminists and minority groups elsewhere.

Opponents say liberation theology veers too much toward worldly concerns and accuse its advocates of subordinating religious to political ideals. They also contend that the willingness of some liberationists to employ Marxist analysis and their condoning of the right of the oppressed to use force discredit it as an authentic Christian theology.

Kohl, favors Kurt Biedenkopf, a former general secretary of Mr. pected to focus on East-West relative with Soviet leaders last week, and that the results of his trip and Mr. Kohl's recent trip to Budapest, would be discussed.

What is expected to become a controversial issue is West Germany's insistence that it be allowed to subsidize its farmers to offset an agricultural change made at the last summit meeting held in March in Brussels

Bonn had already been authorized to pay a subsidy equal to 3 percent of the value of farm sales from Jan. 1, 1985, to compensate for dismantling a system of border taxes and subsidies that had fa-vored West German farm exports.

But Mr. Kohl, who is committed to paying German farmers to offset the move, had asked to advance the date to July 1, 1984, and increase the payment to 5 percent. The EC Commission ruled last week that it was illegal.

Mr. Kohl nevertheless intends to proceed with seeking support, and he is expected to meet with stiff resistance from several EC leaders and the commission.

Bonn Bars Entry to E. Berlin Mission

BERLIN (Reuters) — West Germany barred East Germans Monday from entering its mission in East Berlin, where about 50 people have taken refuge in an attempt to emigrate.

Hans Otto Braentigam, head of the mission, said that "we are no longer in the position of giving refuge to visitors to the building." He said visitors were not being allowed inside but were being dealt with it a small

Mr. Braemigam said the restriction on visitors was an independent decision of the mission and was not part of a deal with East Germany to allow the would-be emigrants to go to the West.

Shiites Free Libyan Envoy in Beirut

BEIRUT (Reuters) - Militiamen of the Shine Moslem Amal group Monday stormed the West Beirut hideout of a Shiite extremist group and freed a Libyan diplomat kidnapped Saurday, a spokesman for Amal Militia sources said the diplomat, Mohammed Moughraby, was being escorted to the Syrian frontier Monday after Libya had agreed to the kidnappers' demand that four Libyan diplomats leave Lebanon within 48 hours. The senior Libyan diplomat in Berrit said negotiations were under way with Amal leaders to extend the deadline.

The speed of Mr. Monghraby's release by Amal militiamen appeared to indicate the embarrassment of Amal's leaders, including its chief, Nabih Berri, who is now a government manister, over the lodinspring. BANGKOK (Reuters) - About 3,000 fresh Viennamese troops have been sent to replace some of the estimated 10,000 soldiers Hanoi has started to withdraw from Cambodia, Klimer Rouge guerrillas said Monday in a broadcast monitored in Bangkok.

A senior Thai military officer said earlier that Thai intelligence had noted the arrival in Bettambang province in western Cambodia late last month of about 2,000 fresh troops from South Vietnam. The Khmer Rouge, as it has on previous occasions, said Vietnam's claim of a partial pullout was a trick. It was the third such withdrawal to be announced since Hanoi invaded Cambodia in 1978. Western analysts say Vietnam has 160,000 to 170,000 troops in Cambodia.

WASHINGTON (Combined Dispatches) — The U.S. Court of Appeals ruled Monday that a lower federal court judge erred when he ordered the attorney general to take steps to appoint a special prosecutor to investigate how Ronald Reagan's 1980 presidential campaign obtained briefing papers from the Carter White House.

In an 8-0 decision, the appeals court said the district court lacked jurisdiction to adjudicate the claim. It said: "We are of the conviction that Congress specifically intended in the Ethics in Government Act to that Congress spectricary microsed in the Ethics in Coveringer of the public, of the attorney general's decisions not to investigate or seek appointment of an independent counsel with respect to officials covered by the act."

The ethics law calls for the attorney general to ask a special court for an independent counsel when there are substantial allegations of wrongdoing against high-level government officials. U.S. District hadge Harold H. Greene ruled last month that Attorney General William French Smith had seven days to seek a special prosecutor to investigate aflegations that Reagan campaign officials illegally obtained documents from President Jimmy Carter's staff.

Major U.S. Teacher Shortage Looms

Children of Baby Boom Generation May Strain the System

By Edward B. Fiske

New York Times Service NEW YORK - After more than decade in which the job prospects for education graduates were bleak, the United States may be headed for a major teacher shortage.

There is already a shortage in math, science and vocational education because of higher salaries tricts cannot find enough teachers for public schools in disadvantaged neighborhoods.

Five years from now, however. the shortages may be felt across the increase over last year and the first board in elementary schools. By the big increase in 12 years.

The shortage is developing at a time when school officials, under pressure to improve academic quality, are trying to be more selective about whom they hire.

The shortage is rooted in demographics. In the late 1970s, after declining for a decade and a half, the number of babies born began to increase as more women of the baby boom generation started having children. Kindergarten classes have been getting bigger since 1982, and school enrollment is expected to increase, grade by grade, for the foreseeable future.

Elementary school enrollment will rise from 30.2 million this September to 34.1 million in 1992, according to projections by the Na-tional Center for Education Statistics, Although high school enrollment will continue to decline from 13.7 million this fall until it reaches a low of 12.1 million in 1990, it will then begin to rise.

If you have revisited Mexico City lately, you may have noticed the decrease in traffic congestion. The reason: Philips master traffic plan. It involves 1,000 intersections, each controlled by microcomputer.

By careful planning, Philips managed to lay 400 kilometres of cables and replace 10,000 traffic lights without disrupting city life. All with the maximum involvement of local labour and industry.

Clearing congestion is one element, controlling is another. Given the busy ports of London, Antwerp and Rotterdam, and the teeming off-shore activities, the North Sea is very prone to congestion.

The Strikes in Europe

The British miners' strike, now in its fourth month, is a direct challenge to the authority of an abrasively conservative prime minister. The German metal workers' strike is a different kind of politics. It is over social policy, and the response to an economy in which a diminishing number of people can produce a rising standard of living. To find anything in American labor history of importance equal to these two, you would have to go back nearly four decades to the coal and steel strikes of the Truman administration.

Since the British coal mines are nationalized, any miners' strike is against the government. This one is an unusually explicit test of wills between Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's Conservative cabinet and the radical leadership of the mine workers' union. Events have been building toward it ever since an earlier miners' strike, a decade ago, destroyed an earlier Conservative government.

The immediate issue in this strike is the government's decision to close some grossly unprofitable mines. But behind that lies the determination of the mine workers' leadership to have it out with Mrs. Thatcher. The ultimate issue here is, quite explicitly, the distribution of political power in Britain.

In Germany, it is a strike for a 35-hour week. The idea is to share the work in a country where the unemployment rate was under percent in the early 1970s, but is over 9 percent now. Since the union wants the shorter hours with no cut in pay, it is turning into a long strike. The government is trying to stay out of it, but it knows that the settlement of this strike will set national economic policy in a larger sense than anything that it is likely to be able to do itself in the next several years.

By now it is no surprise that the Soviet Union, with its decades of experience in ro-

The emotional force behind both of these strikes is the delayed reaction to a period of high unemployment in Europe that has been running for several years and gives no sign of ending. European unemployment is different from the U.S. kind. Even during the past recession. Americans who lost their jobs were usually back on a payroll in a relatively short time. But the European countries are accumulating large populations of people who appear to be more or less permanently unemployed, and youngsters who are out of school but have never had steady work. Not only are the European unemployment rates now higher than those here, but the proportion of long-term unemployed is dramatically higher.

The inability to do anything about that raises, within European labor unions, ques-tions about their own future, and whether they are in decline. The outcomes of these strikes will matter for reasons that run well beyond wages and bours.

Debt Crisis: Too Serious for the Bankers

A SPEN, Colorado — A critical time is at hand for the United States and other industrial countries on a menacing problem: The debts owed to their banks by Third World governments. It is the sort of financial problem that many of us resist understanding. But the potential consequences, human and political, are too serious to leave this one to the bankers.

Suppose, for example, that some powerful outside institution told President Ronald Reagan today that he must reduce the real income of American families, raise taxes, cut government spending on Medicare and other programs and impose dras-tic restrictions on what U.S. companies may im-port, even essential parts. Would it be politically easy for Mr. Reagan, or even possible, to carry out such a prescription?

The example may seem far-fetched, but that is the medicine being prescribed to Third World governments today. And the consequences are far more severe than in the imagined U.S. scenario, because those countries are much poorer - have much less human margin for sacrifice.

Consider Mexico, which owes nearly $90 billion abroad. This year Mexico has borrowed $3.8 billion to meet urgent needs, but it must pay interest of $12 billion on the foreign debt — a net outflow of more than $8 billion from a developing country that needs to bring in capital. And next year the debt service will come to nearly $22 billion.

Figures like those are not abstractions. They mean a lower standard of living, and fewer jobs, and less development, so that the dollars can be sent out. That actually is happening. Over the last three years in Latin America, where much of the By Anthony Lewis debt burden lies, per capita income has dropped 12 percent. But if a country has to cut back on production and investment, how will it develop the wealth to pay its debts in the long run? That is the question haunting the economic world today.

It is the more painful because experience in advanced countries with balance-of-payments problems, such as Britain, has shown that production losses are far worse than the export surplus achieved. A British expert with a talent for makingsuch issues understandable, Harold Lever, took a look at the Third World debt problem in a recent issue of The New York Review of Books. The headline was, "The Debt Won't Be Paid."

It was "in the highest degree improbable," Lord Lever wrote, that most developing countries would be able to achieve large financial surpluses and maintain them for years. Yet that would be required just to pay the interest on existing debts, not to mention the principal.

There is also the political reality. "Will it be politically feasible on a sustained basis," Lord Lever asked, "for the governments of the debtor countries to enforce the measures that would be required to achieve even the payment of interest?
Can it be seriously expected that hundreds of millions of the world's poorest populations would be content for long to toil away in order to transfer resources to their rich rentier creditors?"

Forcing Draconian measures on developing countries so they can keep paying the interest would also hurt the rich creditors. For the debtors could pay only by cutting back deeply on their imports from the industrial world. U.S. exports to Latin America dropped 40 percent between 1981 and 1983. The Commerce Department estimates that that cost 400,000 U.S. jobs.

Moreover, there could be a terrible political price for forcing poor countries into a financial straightjacket. The trend toward democracy, now evident in Latin America and welcome to us, could be reversed. Argentina is the acute example. President Raul Alfonsin has won wide admiration for restoring human rights. Yet he faces fearful eco-nomic problems — inflation is now at 500 percent -and it will be hard for democracy to survive if the financial screw is tightened.

Accepting the fact that the borrowers cannot pay is a matter of realism, not tenderness. Henry Kissinger put it: "These payments simply cannot be made. None of the major debtor countries will be able simultaneously to pay its debt, achieve economic growth and maintain its political and social equilibrium."

For all those reasons it is in the urgent interest of the industrial countries to work out new and lasting measures to ease the debt burden. If steps are not taken soon, there will be a growing incentive for the debtors to repudiate their debts - and that could have a devastating effect on many banks and the whole Western financial system.

Realistically, the banks will have to write off many of the loans, but over a long enough time and with enough official help so they can bear the burden. Sacrifice will have to be shared, by poor countries and rich, their people and institutions.

Is 74, or Maybe Even 78, Too Old to Be the President?

By George W. Ball

PRINCETON, New Jersey—If President Ronald Reagan is re-elected, he will be 74 when he begins his second term and almost 78 when he completes it. But death may not permit him to complete it, for, under insurance actuarial tables, a 74year-old man has only a two-thirds chance of surviving for four more years.

In fact, a president's chances are even less than that, since, in this century, oneeighth of our dead presidents were assassinated - an occupational hazard that the

dents have on the average died at the age

25, 1919. For 18 months, he could function only marginally and fitfully, and, for long periods, not at all. Lying partly paralyzed in a White House bedroom, he was guarded fiercely by his wife, doctor and secre-tary who, in effect, ran the country. He almost never saw anyone else, and com-municated, if at all, only through memo-randums bearing his feeble scrawl or through oral statements by his wife. During a special session of Congress, 28 pieces of legislation became law without presidential approval because Mr. Wilson was unable to sign or veto them. Mean-while, the country and the world speculated with mounting anxiety about the true state of the president's condition. Fortunately, the United States had just helped win a great war and no hostile power could challenge our security, but loday we face an antagonist armed with nuclear weapons. As one who helped advise President John F. Kennedy during the Cuban missile crisis, I am haunted by the thought that we might again be caught up in a similar crisis at a time when our president lay disabled. How could we deal with a Soviet Union whose leaders knew that the only man empowered to push the nuclear button was too ill to think or act decisively - if he were even able to Congress wrestled with the problem of presidential disability in 1967 and produced the 25th Amendment, but disability is still a prescription for chaos. To turn over his powers to the vice president, a president must deliver a declaration in writing to Congress that he can no longer carry out his duties. But no disabled president could make such a declaration, a sentient president, under the influence of a vigilant wife and devoted personal staff, would most likely resist taking that step.

Only the vice president and a majority of the cabinet could break the deadlock by sending Congress a joint declaration that the president was incapacitated. But the president could in turn override that by a new message declaring himself compe-tent. If, after that, the vice president were again to challenge him, the issue would have to be resolved by a twothirds vote of both houses of Congress acting within 24 days. How would all this work in reality? A vice president would long hesitate to risk charges of usurpation by trying to remove the president. Nor could be persuade two-thirds of the cabinet members, chosen for their loyalty to the president, to go along without absolute assurance that the president could never recover.

Yet few responsible medical experts would give such a categorical assurance. Meanwhile, the president might, as in the case of Woodrow Wilson, be kept incommunicado with a palace guard, including his wife, handing out optimistic bulletins while wild speculation filled the press and air waves.

This problem is peculiar to the U.S. system. The Soviet Union, during its last three regimes, and Britain, during the last days of Winston Churchill, managed with an incapacitated leader because the Polithuro and the British cabinet possess collective power and can act without a chairman or prime minister.

But the U.S. cabinet has absolutely no collective power, and our system cannot function without someone exercising the presidential writ. God help our country if we ever actuarial tables do not reflect.

Today, Mr. Reagan at 73 has already lived seven years beyond the age of 66, at which, on the average, our 35 dead presidents have died. Nor has modern medicine substantially improved a president's life expectancy, since our 20th century presi-

Getting the EC Back Together

The time has come when the European Community leaders must settle their differences over the British budgetary problem. The argument has been elevated into a doctrinaire struggle far exceeding the real size of the negotiating gap. The negative consequences of yet another failure risk being far more serious than anyone is publicly admitting.

Continued deadlock [prevents] the Community from making those positive moves for-ward on a number of fronts which are now becoming imperative. One way or another this week's meeting must be a turning point --- for Objective incentives for a more politically united Community are not lacking: European-American tensions, the lamentable state of East-West relations, the pressing need for Europe to take more responsibility for its own security and defense. The uncertain quantity is one of national attitudes.

NATO's Uncertain Future

Lord Carrington, in taking over as NATO's chief executive [today], becomes the fifth sec-retary-general in the history of the alliance and the one who faces the trickiest accumulation of tasks. He has to try to balance rival political and strategic perceptions — and, in the case of Greece and Turkey, rival territorial ambitions -in such a way that the alliance not only goes on increasing in strength but presents a common face to its Soviet adversary in the process.

Nor must one forget his principal domestic task, which is to shake up — and if possible prune — a NATO bureaucracy which has grown both fat and inefficient during the indulgent 13-year reign of his predecessor, Dr. Joseph Luns. The most urgent need is to restore America's confidence in its European allies. They are mostly falling well behind on agreed defense spending commitments. Last troop strengths in Europe unless these targets were met can be regarded as a warning shot across West European bows. - Sunday Telegraph (London).

The distinction between loyalty to the alliance and subservience to U.S. interests is one that Europeans sometimes find difficult to make and one to which the Western European Union is giving increasing attention. If a more independent role for Europe leads to larger defense budgets they will have to be accepted, but total military independence from the U.S. will remain for a long time unattainable and the partnership will not work if on our side it is invariably seen as grudging.

The Catastrophe of Latin Debt

The Latin American debtors' conference which closed Friday in Cartagena, Colombia, issued a joint statement which was milder in tone than expected.

The accumulating debts of the developing nations are taking on catastrophic proportions. Debtor nations are increasingly rebelling against the austerity demanded of them by their creditors, the advanced nations.

There is no way out of this problem except through cooperation between the developing countries and the advanced nations, says former Secretary of State Henry Kissinger. The high interest rate is making it even more difficult for the developing countries to repay their debts. It is absolutely essential for the U.S. to start trying to lower its high interest rates by drastically reducing its budget deficit. Banks which lent without restraint in the past should reconsider their lending policy. They should desist from charging high interest by taking advantage of the weakness of debtor countries and should also think of shouldering some burden, such as shelving interest.

Beijing Owes Tibet a Compromise

N EW YORK — Thirty-four years after its invasion of Tibet, China remains in a quandary on the roof of the world. After seven years of secret negotiations with the Dalai Lama, Tibet's exiled ruler, the difficult issue of Tibetan independence remains unresolved. The talks are stalled, but underneath their stated positions both sides seem interested in working out a deal — for more or less freely administered automomy. The burden is now on China — to recognize the full extent of Tibetans' nationalism and need for sovereignty and to take steps to advance the ne-

For more than 20 years, Chinese propaganda has portrayed Tibet as "the darkest feudal serfdom in the world." In fact, nothing could be further from the truth. Though Tibet's economy was undeveloped and its social system stratified, its ancient civilization stood out as one of the civilization stood out as one of the most impressive in world history. A nation the size of Western Europe, in which one-quarter of the male popu-lation was monks. Tibet alone pos-sessed the entire body of Buddhist literature and liturgy. Its state-run medical colleges taught the 2,500-year-old science of Buddhist medicine, and more than 6,000 monasteries had, for more than a millennium. been centers of scholarship and art.

The Chinese invaded in 1950. They conquered the country easily, although they allowed the Dalai Lama to rule as a figurehead. In 1959, a popular revolt against Communist economic and cultural reforms spread to the capital, forcing him to flee, followed by 100,000 refugees. Since then, Beijing has ruled Tibet directly.

Now, evidence obtained by Tibetan refugees living in India has provided the first glimpse of what can only be called a holocaust. Forced labor, imprisonment and widespread starvation have caused the deaths of an estimated 1.2 million Tibetans one-seventh of the population. A total of 6,254 monasteries have been gutted, their priceless art treasures either melted into bullion or sold for

Republic. What Beijing does not speak about is the sustained unrest of the Tibetan people and the continued need for stringent military control. Since 1959, there have been at least 50 uprisings. There are more than 100,000 political prisoners. Amdo, Tibet's northeastern province, is home of the largest gulag in China — or anywhere in the world. It houses some 10 million prisoners - most of them Chinese. Beijing maintains a half-million troops in central Tibet one soldier for every 12 Tibetans. Tibet remains in an explosive state: In the latest round of arrests, last autumn, 3,000 dissidents were interred and 35 publicly executed. Beging knows that it cannot bring stability to Tibet unless it is able to convince the Dalai Lama to return. He and 100,000 refugees have constituted a democratic government in ex-ile based in Dharamsala, India. They have recreated a self-sustaining soci-ety that preserves Tibetan culture and functions as a living refutation of China's claims. The six million people remaining in Tibet look to them as the sole hope for Tibetan freedom. The Chinese have sought unsuccessfully to persuade him to come home since 1977: They hope he will preside over an apparently legitimate govern-ment under their control. He has those conditions but continues to talk to Beijing and has offered to visit. Yet throughout the negotiations, China has behaved in a duplicitous and ultimately self-defeating manner. It continues to promise wide-spread liberalization and a measure self-government. Nonetheless, Beijing has increased its troop strength in Tibet and drastically tightened public security.

Compromise is possible. The Tibetan government in exile has not admitted that it would accept anything less than complete independence. China maintains that Tibet is an inseparable part of the People's Republic. Yet both sides recognize that they will probably have to settle for some form of partial autonomy. In order to reach a compromise, Beijing must admit that its claims to Tibet are unfounded and unrealistic. China can never hope to amend the inestimable tragedy of having de-stroyed a 2,100-year-old culture in a mere 25 years. It should, however, be able to find the courage to permit a new Tibet to rebuild itself from the ruins of the old.

New Moves In Pretoria's Game Plan

By John de St. Jorre

WASHINGTON — A political game that makes chess look like checkers is under way in southern Africa as Pretoria tries out a new strategy. If successful, it would bypass the Reagan administration's elaborate diplomacy for removing the Cubans from Angola and would eliminate the prospective UN role in decolonizing Namibia. South Africa signed a nonaggression pact with Marxist Mozambique in March and a similar accord with Swaziland two years ago, and is con-ducting a phased withdrawal of its forces from southern Angola. With new confidence. Pretoria is reaching out to broker "African" solutions with the black states of the region.

South Africa is pursuing a twotrack strategy, the American route and its own "regional" path. Both sides agree on the initial objective the withdrawal of Pretoria's troops from southern Angola, an exercise that is now almost complete. The next move is Washington's.

The United States will try to per-suade Angola to send home the 25,000 Cuban troops whose role has been to protect the government against Jonas Savimbi's dissident movement UNITA, the National Union for the Total Independence of Angola. If that happens, South Africa would be expected to keep a promise to hand over Namibia to the United Nations, which would arrange elections, draft a constitution, and aid the formation of a government.

The two tracks will stay close as the Americans pursue this "linkage strategy. But if the Angolans balk and stalemate ensues, as Pretoria expects, the South Africans will feel free to part company with the United States. The "African gambit" will then be fully deployed, effectively bypassing American diplomacy.

The gambit is based on two as sumptions. First, Pretoria now seems ready to accept a genuinely independent Namibia under the South-West Africa People's Organization, the Namibian nationalist movement.

Second, South Africa is concerned that if there is no forward momentum after it has withdrawn its troops from Angola, SWAPO's military activity will escalate, threatening the newly established detente in the region.

Pretoria's aim now is to conclude a Mozambique-style nonaggression pact with Angola in which Luanda will undertake to deny SWAPO ac-cess to Namibia. In return, South Africa will stay on its side of the border and cut off UNITA's aid.

With SWAPO's military option eliminated, Pretoria will exert pressure on the movement to become more involved in Namibia's internal politics, using its growing range of contacts and credibility with black Africa. Angola will be Pretoria's main target because if it accepts the gambit, there is a good chance the other black states will go along.

South Africa figures that the pros-pect of a genuine handover of power in Namibia, and the shelving of its demand for a prior commitment for a Cuban withdrawal, will be an offer that neither the leaders of Angola no: SWAPO can refuse.

Pretoria's plan is already visible. It has released Herman Toivo ia Toivo. a SWAPO founder, to show good faith. A regional, round-table conference of all the major parties has been floated, taking the United States by surprise. Regular contacts between internal SWAPO leaders in Namibia and their comrades elsewhere, as well as top-level meetings between South African officials and SWAPO are taking place.

And President Kenneth Kaunda of Zambia, a key frontline mediator, has helped to open up a dialogue between SWAPO and the internal Namibian parties in Lusaka. The meeting ended without an agreement on Namibia's independence, but the dialogue is expected to continue

The Cubans, Washington's bogeymen, do not seem to worry South Africa much anymore, if indeed they ever did. Linking their withdrawal with freeing Namibia was an Ameri-can ploy that Pretoria endorsed when it was expedient. South Africa expects Angola to send the Cubans home eventually, but its game plan gives Luanda more time to settle its differences with Jonas Savimbi who, with or without South African aid. will remain a powerful and potentially disruptive factor.

If South Africa's strategy works and produces a genuinely independent Namibia, approved by the African frontline states and hence presumably by the international community. Pretoria will deserve credit for having finally solved one of the ration's pretorial and the product of the state of the stat the region's major problems, albeit one of its own making,

The Reagan administration will have to come to terms with a curious irony. One of its goals - an independent Namibia — will have been achieved. But its chosen method (the "linkage" tactic) and the golden prize of a Cuban departure from Angola in a presidential election year will have been finessed by the very power it was supposedly designed to benefit.

In reality, South Africa is far more interested in consolidating "Pax Pretoriana" in the region and gaining time to root its new constitution. which grants limited powers to the colored, or mixed-race, and Indian minorities. The bad news is that the constitution also reinforces the essentials of apartheid and excludes South Africa's 22 million blacks, the real losers in this chess game.

The writer, author of "A House Divided: South Africa's Uncertain Future" and a senior associate at the Carnegie Endowment for Internation-al Peace in Washington, recently returned from southern Africa. He contributed this comment to the International Herald Tribune.

1909: The Corporate Income Tax Bill WASHINGTON — The Administration took a plunge into the anti-corporation maelstrom [on June 25]. It proposes to sink or swim on the outcome of the new tax proposal. The amendment launched in the troubled waters of the Senate by Senator Aldrich imposes a tax of two percent on the net income of all corporations exceeding $5,000. The amendment empowers the collector, when a return is not made or is suspected to be fraudulent, to examine the books and resort to the courts if necessary. According to Senate leaders, the ways are greased for railroading the amendment through. The Democrats show lukewarmness, while insurgent Senators say they will oppose the amendment unless jail penalties are prescribed for officers of corporations.

It is understood that the British government was given oral intimation that Washington would welcome some clarification of the proposed program. Mr. Davis is reported to have had only a vague hint of such a proposal and that was at a meeting with Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald [on June 20], when the latter stressed the vast responsibilities of Britain in the Far East as

By 2020, nearly 25 percent of Japanese will be 65 or older, the highest ratio in the world, compared with about 16 percent in the United States and around 19 percent in Britain.

Mr. Ogawa said medical expenditure will have to rise 70 times in nominal terms between 1980 and 2025 and that contributions to pension plans will have to triple, reducing personal savings and the funds available for industrial developwenty years from now young girls will not be working on Sony assembly lines, they will be looking after the old," Mr. Ogawa said. One possible mitigating factor is the forecast of a rapid rise in the number of robots in factories and medical and welfare services. A recent report by the Interna-tional Trade and Industry Ministry said robot production in Japan was expected to soar to 560,000 units in 1990 from 77,000 a decade earlier. The report said robots would inchoice, the people are there al-ready, said Naohiro Ogawa, depu-ty director of Nihon University's their 20s, and added that they population research institute. "The should be designed for easy use by older people.

> Dr. Robert Butler, a gerontologist and former director of the U.S. National Institute on Aging, told a recent seminar here that divorce was rising in the United States because of longer life expectancy. The problems of old age were essentially those of women because women outlived men, he added. In Japan, about 70 percent of old people lived with their children in 1980. The percentage is falling, but remains much higher than in many other countries.

An economic planning agency survey said the number of bedbound aged was expected to double by the year 2000 to more than one million. It called for better welfare

The government has already started taking action to cope with such problems. A bill before parlia-ment would cut state medical spending by making people pay 10 percent of their medical costs intead of just a small nominal sum. Priority for state housing goes to families supporting an elderly Among solutions Dr. Butler proposes for an aging society's prob-lems is higher spending on medical and sociological research to keep the aged fit and productive. Mr. Ogawa suggests incentives to bring more women into the workforce, retraining retired people and im-proving the education and skills of the young.

Greenwich Marks Century Of Ruling World's Clocks

LONDON - Greenwich Mean Time celebrates its 100th anniver-

Although the rulers of the world's clocks moved out of their Greenwich observatory in London's suburbs years ago, it has remained the symbol of uniform time, with a museum and a brass strip marking the meridian from which the world measures time zones.

The six beeps broadcast by the British Broadcasting Corp. throughout the world are still the most reliable for setting watches, whether it's midnight in Moscow or daybreak in Hawaii.

On Tuesday, the centenary of the 1884 international conference in Washington when GMT was adopted internationally will be marked by the flight of a Concorde jetliner carrying a message of greetings to the town of Greenwich, Connecticut, at a speed faster than sound. Seventeenth century navigators had established latitudes but had failed to work out the longitudes as a cross-reference for charting their course. So in 1675 King Charles II ordered an observatory built in Greenwich where a solution could be found.

Even after the longitudes were established, chaos persisted as each major scalaring nation followed its own meridian. It was not until 1911 that France and Ireland abandoned the "Paris meridian" and joined the Greenwich mean.

Chanel-like Adolfo suit,

N EW YORK — An American well-groomed, middle-aged fans, all wearing Adolfo suits, at his recent winter-and-fall collection in

New York. Although the New York collections were held several weeks ago,

HEBE DORSEY

Adolfo is known for showing later and doing his own thing, which he can afford to do because he has a faithful following. So here they were, piled four deep, the movers and the shakers of the New York luncheon hour, women you are sure to find regularly at La Grenouille or Le Cirque, munching carrots and dieting the expensive way.

As they stepped out of limousines, it was easier to spot the wom-en not wearing Adolfos than the other way around. Mildred Hilson, the philanthropist, was in a blackand-white Givenchy. "It works better for me," she said, adding that an Adolfo suit looked nice for traveling and board meetings but "I Yet, Adolfo is pained if you tell don't like to see myself coming and him that his suits are Chanel going." As for Martha Phillips and her daugher, Lyon Manulis, of the Martha fashion salons, they stood out in real Chanel couture suits. After the show, Manulis said: 'Adolfo said he loved my suit and he took a real close look at it."

Other customers went around looking like twins, and sometimes triplets and quadruplets. They often sat next to each other, in identical outfits, including a couple in white suits cut across by red, toysoldier braid. But far from being upset, these women looked frankly pleased.

To fashion cognoscenti, an down to the contrasting braid, the. gold button-trimmed culfs, the stacks of gold chains, the camellias, the quilted bags and the famous her," he said. "She was 75. But she can fashion at its best."

trimmed three-quarter coats were also vintage Chanel, as were the Deauville pleated pajama pants and the long knitted cardigans. But somehow, it was different.

Trying to compare Chanel and Adolfo is like comparing "Coco," the Broadway musical based on Chanel's life, with the real thing. While a Chanel suit is totally French and undeniably more chic, an Adolfo suit is lighter, easier and definitely more colorful. It is also more practical and better suited to to running a semi-custom trade. American women's tastes. In fact, it is more about a market than about fashion. And as such, it is a huge success.

Adolfo himself made no bones about saying he admired the late Chanel very much.

Interviewed in his salon, which is lined with coromandel screens another very Chanel touch - he said: "I would have loved to have been hired by the house of Chanel, like Karl Lagerfeld. I think I would have done a good job."
Yet, Adolfo is pained if you tell copies. "They aren't actually copies," he said. "They're very different even if they resemble Chanel's a lot."

So, where's the difference?
"First of all, they're all made of knits," be said. This explains the lighter, snugger feeling and the easy-to-keep, easy-to-pack aspect.
"I've developed machines which can make all these elaborate stitches," he said. The result, from a distance, looks remarkably like the signed, is rather flattering, don't tweeds used by Chanel, except less you think?

Apologizing for wearing a thim-ble and a white robe ("I like to Adolfo suit is a Chanel suit - with sew"). Adolfo said he learned the a difference. The look is all there, trade from a Cuban seamstress who had worked for Jean Patou and Madeleine Vionnet in Paris.

Adolfo employs 250 people, most of whom work in a Long Island factory, but his little salon has an intimate feeling, and Adolfo is known for understanding and accommodating his customers. Unlike most other houses, which function on a rigid, assembly-line pattern. Adolfo will change a fabric here, a blouse there, which amounts Insisting that he never bought anything from Chanel's, "Not even a bottle of perfume," Adolfo added, "The same labric manufacturers who sell to Chanel often come to me. But I always refuse to buy from them."

Actually, Adolfo thinks that, somehow, he may have helped Chanel. "There's another side to this story." he said. "When I started doing my clothes. Chanel was a very quiet house. Then people started talking about me. So you could say that I revived the interest

How does the house of Chanel feel about Adolfo? After rumors that they were going to sue him, they apparently decided to drop the whole idea and to be generou about it. Said Lagerfeld, in a grand seigneur manner: "I think it's amusing. I think it's a compliment. The fact that Adollo should pick not only the old Chanel styles but the new ones as well, which I de-

ON HOW Japan Should Function as a Financial Center

THE ROLE of Japan as a capital exporter has received a lot of attention in recent international debate. What role is Japan presently prepared to play? And what role should it play in the future?

Watanabe: I think we see two clear functions emerging for Japan as an international money and capital market. First, as an international financial center on a par with New York and London, Tokyo is in an excellent position to facilitate international capital flows. Second, the expansion of the Japanese money and capital markets should contribute to the internationalization of the yen, thus enabling Japan to play a role commensurate with its position as the second largest economy in the free world.

Looking briefly at the history of recent developments, we see a dramatic transformation in the flow of funds in Japan in the 1970s. In the 1960s and before, large surpluses of funds in the personal sector were absorbed by investment in the corporate sector. But as growth slowed in the 1970s, corporate fund demand shrunk, and personal savings continued to rise. The surplus of savings was absorbed by the public sector as the government financed budget deficits and by the export of capital concurrent with surpluses on the current account of the balance of payments.

The shortage of funds in the external sector has grown as Japan has continued to run balance-of-payments surpluses. Assuming that the Japanese economy performs well and oil prices remain stable over the long term, Japan will still be reporting surpluses in the late 1980s and beyond.

In addition to finding new means for an effective domestic use of capital, by exporting capital Japan can broaden and diversify its response to the expectations of developing and advanced nations alike for financial cooperation.

In fact, Japan must move in this direction, and structural reasons indicate that it will. We are already beginning to see Japan function more actively as an intermediary in the international flow of funds, and I have every reason to believe this function will expand rapidly.

WOULD YOU briefly review the progress of expansion?

Watanabe: If we analyze how capital exports were financed in the 1970s, about one-quarter of long-term capital outflows was financed by a current account surplus, one-quarter by short-term lending as reflected in the surplus of the short-term capital account, and one-half by long-term capital inflows. By 1982, Japan was a net supplier of capital in the amount of $15 billion. This puts Japan side-by-side with such major international capital markets as Switzerland, at $13.7 billion, and the United Kingdom, at $15.1 billion.

As Japan's importance grows as an international financial center, I foresee the influx of additional short-term capital along with higher short-term borrowings and long-term loans. Naturally, we must create the environment that will support Japan's role as an international money and capital market.

As the capital market grows, the yen will need to function more as a reserve currency and currency of settlement, complementing the role the dollar has played for many years. As the recent report of the Yen/Dollar Committee (Working Group of Joint Japan-U.S. Ad Hoc Group on Yen/Dollar Exchange Rate, Financial and Capital Market Issues to the respective finance ministers) reveals, Japan has clearly chosen to move decisively toward internationalizing the yen.

Shogo Watanabe
The Chairman of Nikko Securities, Shogo Watanabe, speaks from 46 years of experience in both the banking and securities industries in Japan. He is currently serving as Chairman of the Securities Dealers Association of Japan.

THE GREATEST pressure worldwide has been to provide better access to the Japanese capital market. How do you evaluate recent steps in this direction?

Watanabe: I think two factors influence access to the market. One is participation of overseas financial institutions in the Japanese market. In the past they have operated under the same conditions as domestic institutions. All have been provided "equal opportunity." Recently, however, we hear demands that proceed from a principle of "reciprocity."

Here, I think caution is merited. The principle of reciprocity implicitly denies a country autonomy and independence in managing its financial system. That denial is unacceptable. I am, however, the first to agree with the arguments presented by the proponents of reciprocity when their opinions have obvious merit in promoting the efficiency of the Japanese financial system.

Another concrete issue has been the liberalization of the money and capital markets. The secondary markets are absolutely open to resident and nonresident alike. But room exists for further liberalization of the primary market, including yen-denominated foreign bonds, or samurai bonds, as they are called.

The first domestic issue of yendenominated bonds by a foreign entity was in 1970. The market has expanded steadily since then and by 1983 reached $3.9 billion. At first the issuers were principally international financial institutions, but the list has grown to include national governments and various government agencies.

Since 1979 private corporations have had access to the market, but the number of issues has been few. The principal reasons have been the insistence of authorities on collateral, the complexity of issuing procedures, and the inflexibility of offering terms and conditions.

As I said, we must proceed on the basis of Japan making its own decisions on the pace of liberalization. When the system or customs are too inflexible compared to international norms, as participants in the market we must hasten the process of change. That is our duty.

The signs of change are readily evident. On May 30 the Yen/Dollar Committee agreed on the liberalization of the Euroyen market. This move will also have an effect on the domestic market, accelerating the process of liberalization. As well, it will give nonresidents much easier access to the issue market for yen bonds.

At present, the Securities Council Commission, an advisory group for the Minister of Finance, is studying the current status of the bond market. I fully expect the results of its deliberations will prompt other efforts toward liberalization.

Through these efforts, I can state with confidence that, step by step, Japan is moving toward becoming an international financial center.

DOMESTICALLY, as well, calls are heard for further liberalization of the financial system. One issue is development of the money market. Just how soon do you foresee the introduction of new instruments?

Watanabe: The Japanese money market is qualitatively and quantitatively inferior to those in the United States and Europe. In September 1983 it was only one-tenth the size of the U.S. money market, and if we limit the definition to the really open part of the market, only one-twentieth. Right now this open market encompasses only the gensaki, or bond repurchase agreements, and negotiable CDs. That is not a great variety of instruments.

From the perspective of almost everyone concerned, the creation of a robust money market must have top priority in the process of deregulating Japan's financial system. We in the securities industry are committed to this task.

Several factors should accelerate the development process. First, the government must start refinancing in 1985 and beyond the large volume of long-term debt it began issuing in 1975. The initial step to facilitate this process will need to be a shortening of maturities on government bonds, thus creating a treasury bill market.

Second, the Yen/Dollar Committee recently agreed to establish a yen Banker's Acceptance market at the earliest possible time. This should benefit domestic traders as well as trading partners in Southeast Asia, Oceania, and elsewhere.

Third, the business community is expressing its desire for a commercial paper market. Those of us in the securities industry would like to respond.

A CLOSELY related problem is the interest rate structure. How fast will Japan move in the direction of allowing the market to determine interest rates?

Watanabe: The question of the mechanism for determining interest rates arose with the rapid growth of the secondary market for government bonds. Because the yields on these bonds moved with the balance of supply and demand, they tended to be more attractive than the yields on regulated instruments. Thus, we witnessed the shift of corporate liquidity from bank deposits to bonds. The introduction of CDs and their floating rates gave the banks a means with which to compete.

The conflict between regulated and free rates can only intensify. The inevitable result will be further pressure to liberalize interest rates and the growth of the money market. The rapid chain of events in the United States is ample evidence of just how fast change can be effected.

institutions have been opening operations in Japan in expectation of growing capital inflows and outflows. What do you see as their role in the market?

Watanabe: At present nine foreign securities companies have branch operations in Japan, and many more have representative offices. The nine are all members of the Securities Dealers Association of Japan, of which I am chairman. I welcome their contributions and seek their cooperation in developing the securities market in Japan.

I think there are two main motivations for the entry of commercial and investment banking organizations into the Japanese market. One is their superior financial tech nology and expertise in several fields. A good example is the international cash management services offered by Citibank.

Another is the profits to be obtained through diversification and the promotion of synergies. The Japanese capital market has presented obvious attractions as it has grown. We have seen, for example, a dramatic jump in the volume of pension and other institutional funds from Europe and the United States flowing into Japanese equities.

All the leading investment managers are competing to obtain these accounts. I am pleased to say Nikko International Capital Management has been extremely successful because of an excellent performance record that is the best among all Japanese investment advisers who handled U.S. pension funds in 1983.

My own perspective is that healthy competition is requisite for the healthy development of a capital market. Our international colleagues are in a position to meet the diverse needs of Japanese investors. I only hope that we can prove ourselves able competitors.

FUTURES AND OPTIONS

Traders Aided by 'Strangles' For Tools On Treasury-Bond Options Up by 27%

By H.J. MAIDENBERG

New York Times Service

EW YORK - When in doubt about an option market's direction, many professional traders simply "strangle" it, and traders in Treasury-bond options who did so last week profited handsomely.

An options "strangle" involves buying equal amounts of calls and puts. Calls are the right, but not the obligation, to buy the underlying futures at a fixed price within a specified time. Puts are the right to sell these contracts under the same conditions. An option's price is called the premium.

Early last week, many Treasury-bond options traders were extremely nervous as they awaited the government's "flash fig-ures" on the U.S. gross national product for the second quarter. The figure was to be reported on Wednesday. Many economists had forecast a sharp drop in the GNP, which would have been bullish for the battered bond market. Just as many other economists predicted the figure would show a still booming econo-

a windfall because of the size of the number."

"What they got was my, which would mean greater demand for credit and higher interest rates. Any rise in interest rates depresses the value of bonds and other fixed-income securities that yield lower rates. By Tuesday, many professional bond-options traders had stopped biting their nails and were busily strangling the market. When the "flash figures" indicated an unexpectedly large rise of 5.7 percent in the GNP in the current quarter, the stranglers were ecstatic.

"At worst, the stranglers expected to lose a few dollars in their hedged position; at best they expected modest gains," said Richard L. Sandor, senior vice president at Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc. in Chicago, "But what they got was a windfall because of the size of the number." Mr. Sandor is an authority on financial futures and options markets.

Options strangles are often likened to the "spread" or "straddle" long used by futures traders, but Mr. Sandor said that while both were used to hedge positions, further comparisons could prove deceptive.

For instance, he explained that strangles involve out-of-themoney options; there are no such things in futures. Out-of-themoney options usually have little intrinsic value at the moment and sell for much lower premiums than in-the-money contracts that already show a profit. Also, stranglers rarely buy any but the nearest option, which, in the case of the Treasury bonds, expires

Mr. Sandor continued: "The situation at last Tuesday's close found the September bond futures at 62 5/32; the 58 puts on that option at 28/64, and the 66 calls also trading at 28/64. The premiums were made to order for a strangle."

Each 32nd of a point in bond futures represents $31.25 per contact with a face value of $100,000. At 62 5/32, they were trading, in effect, at just over 62 cents on the dollar. Bond options are traded in 64ths of a point, which are worth $15.63 each.

At Wednesday's close, after the stunning flash GNP figure had savaged bond prices, the premiums on bond options puts had soared to 49/64, while those on the calls had sunk to 17/64. This meant that the put side of the strangle had gained 21/64, or $328.23, while the call side had lost 11/64, or $171.93. Thus the gain on the strangle was $156.30.

By Friday's close, those who kept their stranglehold had even larger gams. The 58 pags ended at 58/64, up $468.90 from Tuesday's close, The 66 calls closed at 13/64, down $234.45. In sum, the two out-of-the-money options had produced a profit of $234,45 on each strangle.

Meanwhile, the spot September Treasury-bond futures closed Friday at 60 7/32, down 2 full points and 20/32nds, representing had bought the spot September bond futures at last Monday's opening would have lost the entire initial margin, or cash outlay, required to buy a contract. Still, Treasury-bond futures are expected to continue to be the most actively traded contracts on any futures market. Last week, an estimated 900,000 bond futures changed hands. Volume in bond options, while growing rapidly, was estimated at roughly

Brokers expect both volumes to climb this week as government securities dealers begin hedging their planned purchases at the Treasury's next major bond anction. Their hedging operation will, as usual, consist of selling bond futures and options short.

So far, its nonconformist strategy is paying off. After being the only major chemical company to lose money in 1982, Celanese is likely to outperform the industry this year and report record profits. But it is too soon for the company to rest on its laurels: Because the chemical industry is so cyclical, Celanese's failure to diversify could leave it especially vulnerable to the next down-

Latin Americans Grant Argentina Debt Extension

By Juan de Onis Las Angeles Times Service

CARTAGENA, Colombia Argentina has obtained a 30-day reprieve from its Latin Amerian creditors on repayment of a $300million loan after promising to make a serious effort to reach a stabilization agreement with the International Monetary Fund.

The assurances were given by Argentina's economics minister, Bernardo Grinspun, in private meetings with other finance ministers attending the Latin American debt conference of 11 countries here last week, Finance Minister Edgar Gutiérrez Castro of Colombia reported Sunday.

As a result of what Mr. Gutiérrez Castro called a "strong moral commitment" by Argentina to pay its debt, the finance ministers of Mexico, Brazil, Colombia and Venezuela agreed to extend the repayment deadline of June 30 for the $300 million that they lent to Argentina in March to prevent an Argentine default on interest payments to international banks.

But the Latin American loan from the four nations' central banks was only a minor obligation, part of Argentina's total foreign debt of $43 billion — which the new Buenos Aires administration is trying to refinance.

Attempts to reach agreement with creditor banks have been stalled by Argentina's resistance to accepting a stabilization agreement with the IMF that would require sharp reductions in budget deficits, wage restraints and other anti-in-flationary measures. Several analysts said the market was active very well considering the news background that included a hike in the prime lending rate.

"Volume is lacking, however, so it looks like the market is in a holding pattern for a while," said John Burnett of Donaldson, Lufkin & Jenrette. "There is no great rush to buy securities and there are no signs of urgency to sell."

NYSE Prices Ease in Slow Day increase and could not understand why federal funds rates had risen to the 11 to 12 percent range recently.

Many Wall Street analysts had expected the prime rate hike because the economy, while showing signs of slowing down, remains robust and has brought on heavy credit demand from the private sector.

Brokers encouraged that congressional conferees over the weekend agreed on a bill to raise taxed by $50 billion and cut spending by $11 billion through fiscal 1987.

The conferees also agreed to cut the holding period for capital gains taxes to six months from 12 months and repealed the 30-percent witholding tax on interest paid to foreign investors in U.S. securities.

"There has been a confluence of negative news lately and this has not broken the market down," said Ralph Acampora of Kidder Pea-body. "I think the market is saying it wants to higher and I'm encouraged." AT&T (ex-dividend) was one of the most active NYSE-listed issue. AT&T is slated to

Orion to Stop Insuring Satellites

By Elizabeth Tucker Washington Post Service

WASHINGTON - Orion Insurance Co., a leading London underwriter of insurance for satellites, has decided not to take on any new insurance contracts for either government or commercial space proiects because of the high number of satellite losses this year and the general unprofitability of the busi-

The decision last week is expected to cause other insurance companies to re-evaluate their policy of underwriting satellite launches and to reduce the amount of insurance available for such projects.

"My company has decided we have had enough of the game. We loss from Intelsat is from whoever are not accepting new business, it's permanent," said Bernard Goudge, he said. who handles space-insurance un-derwriting for Orion.

Mr. Goudge attributed the decision to "arithmetic." Of the 25 satellite launches it is involved in each and "Intelsat and government teleyear, the company expects to communications systems that do "lose" one, he said. This year, how-not necessarily have to be insured ever, Orion lost three, Mr. Goudge

We have lost $300 million in one year. In terms of the losses we've sustained, we haven't had enough money." he said.

The company has partially unlost in space over the last seven years. Mr. Goudge said Orion's premiums for satellite insurance would have risen by 300 percent as a result of the loss of Westar-6, Palapa-B2 and Intelsat-VF9, all in the first six months of 1984.

One major problem with the space insurance business, as opposed to other insurance areas, is its "nonrenewable" nature. Mr. Goudge said. In the aviation business, for example, "if year one is bad you can make an adjustment in years two and three," he said. In the space business, "there isn't any way in which you can transfer the increase in price to the people who caused the loss. The space business is nonrenewable business." he said. Mr. Goudge said companies seeking insurance fall into two categories: "those forced to insure, and may go self-insured."

If fewer companies take out satellite insurance, Mr. Goudge said, insurance concerns will mark up their premiums even more drastically to make up for lost business. Construction Is to Resume At Seabrook

United Press International WESTBOROUGH, Massachusetts - Construction at the troubled Seabrook nuclear power plant in New Hampshire will resume next week under a plan that is to bring about 4,200 employees back to work under new independent management.

The owners voted Saturday to resume construction of the Unit 1 reactor by July 2 under New Hampshire Yankee, a newly created entity that is to eventually become part of Yankee Atomic Electric Co., owner of the Yankee Atomic Power Plant in Rowe, Massachusetts. The project was halted 10 weeks ago because of the growing debt incurred by its principal owner, Public Service Co. of New Hampshire, which has a 35.6-percent interest. Under the plan, responsibility for finishing the project will be transferred to New Hamp-shire Yankee, which expects to hire back about 800 employees during the next few weeks and expects eventually to have 4,200 workers on the site, including 1.000 managerial employees. The Seabrook reactor 2 project, which was terminated last fall, was not part of the plan.

Celanese is the West's largest producer of the substance. It began investing heavily in methanol in the late 1970s when management thought gasoline prices would continue to rise and methanol would quickly capture a large share of the gasoline market.

But gasoline prices have slipped and methanol has not been the gold mine Celanese had hoped. "It's just an albatross around their neck," Mr. Raman said.

While basic chemicals are still weak, Celanese's specialty chemicals area has picked up. The com-pany's international division, too, is registering better results than in 1982. Although the economies in

But Mr. Macomber maintains that his company is already on a growth track. For instance, he boasts of one of its brightest new stars, a fireproof chemical called lars of polyester from Celanese annually. Thus, there is more polyester capacity being built offshore and that wornes me. It's going to growth in track. For instance, in the polyester capacity being built offshore and that wornes me. The Spanish coach, Miguel Munoz. and his players feel aggrieved that they have not been given due credit for their results so far.
The Spaniards' 5-4 penalty shoot-out victory over Denmark in Sunday night's semilinal was greeted with the same wry smiles which met their 12-1 destruction of hapless Malta in December — a result which saw the 1964 European champions edge out the Netherlands on goal difference.

"I would point out to our critics that we lost only one of our eight qualifying games and that we are still unbeaten in France," said Munoz, who succeeded Jose Santamaria as Spanish coach after the 1982 World Cup failure. "Of course the penalty decider was unsatisfactory, but we merely follow the rules, we don't dictate them."

The torrid semifinal, which ended 1-1 after extra time, was costly to the Spain, which will be without two of its best players, midfielder Rafael Gordillo and defender Antonio Maceda, in the final. In Cincinnati, Tim Flannery's

"That's what I thought, but it moves pretty fast. Every once in a while a volunteer brings out coffee and doughnuts so it isn't as bad as vou would think."

I had nothing to do for the afternoon so I went to the end of the line. There was a woman senior citizen in front of me.

Donald Duck's Secret of Long Life

By Vincent Canby New York Times Sernes

N EW YORK — To be per-fectly frank, Mickey Mouse has always seemed a bit of a prig. a thoroughly decent, unassuming sort of fellow who's a naturalborn leader, but still a prig. He's the kid who's always elected president of his class without half trying, who does his homework on time and who, if he were on the football team, would never dream of breaking training, no matter how alluring the circumstances. It's in his character to do good deeds for the world's less fortunate and to say — and to believe — that it's always darkest before the dawn. There's nothing wrong with Michey Mouse except that he's practically perfect. This may be why all of us continue to be drawn to that other, far more fallible Walt Disney creation, Donald Duck, who just turned 50 years old.

Donald Duck, who made his first. unbilled appearance in a rather ghastly 1934 Silly Sympho-ny called "The Wise Little Hen," was the first of a whole galaxy of Hollywood cartoon stars whose appeal lies not in their perfection but in their not-always-admirable eccentricities.

Donald is every child who has not yet learned that it's often more prudent to hold one's temper than to turn rose-red with anger and let the fury fly. He is loudmouthed, excitable, impa-tient, shortsighted and accidentprone. In "Fire Chief" (1940), in which he plays the title role, he's the last one to realize that the fire to which he's racing is consuming the firehouse he's just left. When at last he does return, it's the overexcited Donald who attaches the water hose to a gasoline drum, with the predictable results.

Following Donald Duck came the carrot-chomping, laid-back Bugs Bunny, who made his first film as his own star, "A Wild Hare," in 1940; Tom and Jerry. the best of the cat-and-mouse and mechanized dells. teams, which, in the 1940s, won Watching "Ghostb seven Oscars; and still another cat, Sylvester, whose ravenous, single-minded pursuit of Tweety Pie, a small, fat, forever-unobtainable canary with a speech im-pediment, delighted audiences from the 1940s into the 1960s.

To the best of my knowledge, no one has done a definitive study on the ways in which Donald Duck and his contemporaries have influenced the comedy styles of live-action actors and directors of succeeding genera-

The current Film Comment reports that the cartoons of Tex Avery (Bugs Bunny) and Chuck Jones (Tom and Jerry) are favorites of Joe Dante, the director of the peculiarly lunatic new horror film, "Gremlins," which contains a lot of the anarchic mayhem associated with cartoons, though it's played out with live actors

Watching "Ghostbusters," was struck by how much Bill Murray, Dan Aykroyd, Harold Ramis and the other actors, as well as Ivan Reitman, the director, appear to have learned from the Avery and Jones cartoons. Murray doesn't look like Bugs

Bunny, and his vocal delivery is anything except Bugs-strident, but his apparent nonchalance in all circumstances, including a sequence in which he must deal with a demoniacally possessed Sigourney Weaver, is pure Bugs

The anarchy of "National Lampoon's Animal House," and of all the various "Animal House" spinoffs, only begins to make sense if one sees it as an extension of the kind of madworld comedy of the animated shorts of 30 and 40 years ago. The spectacular automobile chases and crashes of "The Blues Brothers" come very close to being duplications of the kind of essentially harmless encounters that Donald Duck and Bugs Bunny are forever having with TNT, gas-oline, bombs, parachutes that fail and other lethal paraphernalia. It's true, I think, that the old cartoons succeeded largely by

nignly with real childhood fears and fantasies of falling, flying and being slapped, bopped and misunderstood. Today, "Ghost-busters," "Stripes," "Animal House" and the other cartoonlike, live-action films are making the same connection. The main difference is that the language and the gags are more hip.

Too frequently, however, Reitman and his associates ignore the primary rule of cartoon-narrative: Keep everything moving fast. In spite of its appealing an-archy, "Ghostbusters" seems lazy. Scene after scene amble by at Murray's amiable pace. Because there's no real comic structure to any sequence, there's no great comic payoff. One laughs at the point of view more often than at the gag.

For vintage Donald Duck, however, one must look to such exuberant offerings as "Donald's Happy Birthday" (1949), in which Donald is seen as a com-pletely wrong headed uncle with his three small nephews. The nephews, discovered by Donald with the box of cigars that was to be his birthday present, are themselves forced to smoke them, and the story ends on an uncharacteristically somber note that is, as any child will tell you, absolutely right: Donald slinking away in

"Don Donald" (1937) unfolds the essential Donald duck personality for the first time, as Donald attempts to woo Daisy Duck by heedlessly trading in his faithful burro for a roadster that has a rumble seat. "The Autograph House" (1940) is a funny and charming recollection of a Hollywood now gone, with Donald, as the world's most pushy autograph hunter, having encounters with caricatures of Greta Garbo, Mickey Rooney, Shirley Temple, Katharine Hepburn and the Ritz

Brothers, among others.

The classic "Chip an' Dale" (1947), in which Donald is outwitted by two elegantly named chipmunks, is virtually an anthology of Donald Duck doubletakes, nasty laughs (when he's about to do something rotten to someone smaller than himself) and his sudden "oh-ohs" when that something rotten backfires on him. Many happy returns, Donald.

The Lennon material included Art Deco jewelry, household furnishings, and musical instruments such as a 1947 Wurlitzer juke box bought by an unidentified bidder for $20,350, twice its pre-sale estimate. Ray Goldberg, 29, of Atlantic City, New Jersey, carried off the artistic prize — a 1969 limited edition of 14 lithographs by Lennon picturing his marriage and honeymoon — for $18,360, more than double their estimate.

It is two decades since the tenor saxophonist Stan Getz helped pop-ularize Brazilian music in the United States with his recording of ed States with ms recording of "Girl From Ipanema," and on Sun-day, in a "Musical Salune to Bra-zil," part of New York's Kool Jazz Festival, Getz played with two fine Brazilian performers: Djavan, a singer and guitarist, and Tania Maria, a songwriter, pianist and singer. . . The Kool Jazz Festival kicked off its 10 days with a tribute to the gypsy guitarist Diango Rein-bandt. Some believe the spirit of Reinhardt, who died in 1953 at age 43, lives in an 18-year-old gypsy jazz guitarist, Bireli Lagrene, who made his American debut at the concert. Lagrene was born in Alsace-Lor-raine, has played guitar since he was 4 and lives in a traveling caravan. Also playing was the jazz violinist Stephane Grappelli, 76, who, with Reinhardt, led the

"It does appear that Willard White has not been selected for a part in 'Rigoletto' not on artistic grounds, but on racial grounds," the council's arts and recreation chairman, Peter the Beatle who was shot to death in Pitt, said. Rupert Rhymes, the opera company's administrative director, defended the decision by the director, Jonathan Miller, not to Lennons set up to help children's hire White. "I think it's a travesty causes around the world. She did of justice to describe it as a racist not attend the sale, but her stepson. stand," he said. He did not give a reason for Miller's decision. The opera company this week is playing in the Metropolitan Opera House in New York, where the tour ends June 30. Its productions, particularly Miller's gangster-style version of Verdi's "Rigoletto," in which players wear modern street clothes, have won standing ovations.

Scotland Yard said Monday it is investigating a brawl between two members of Queen Elizabeth II's staff at Windsor Castle, which al-legedly broke out while a royal party was going on nearby, the London Daily Telegraph reported. One man was injured in the fight and taken to hospital. Scotland Yard declined to say who was involved in the incident or what sparked the fight. But The Daily Telegraph said one of the men involved was a footman. It said the queen had left the party, held to celebrate Prince Edward's success in first-year exams at Cambridge University, before the fight broke out. . . Mean-while Buckingham Palace denied newspaper reports that Prince Andrew was whacked on the bottom six times in a restaurant where waitresses in short skirts punish "naughty" diners, Britain's tabloid newspapers said Monday. Four Sunday newspapers reported the mock caning at School Dinners, a London club where spankings are administered by waitresses dressed Quinter of the Hot Club of France.
